

PROTECTING YOUR ANIMALS ON JULY 4TH

CELEBRATING JULY 4TH IS FUN FOR PEOPLE BUT NOT FOR YOUR PETS.

The ANIMAL ASSISTANCE LEAGUE wants to remind pet owners that pets can easily become frightened, injured or lost during the 4th of July holidays.

The Animal Assistance League recommends:

- Keep the pet safe inside, away from the noise...their hearing is much more sensitive than ours. Have a television or radio on to drown out the sounds of fireworks. For pets who become nervous or upset, consult a veterinarian about tranquilizers. The vet will prescribe according to weight, age and condition of the pet. It is important to consult a veterinarian because tranquilizers can overdose or become toxic when combined with other medications, flea collars or sprays.
- ID tags and current license tags with home phone number and alternate phone numbers (including area codes) are important at all times, but especially so during the 4th of July holidays. Have a registered microchip implanted, it can not fall off and all shelters have scanners. More pets are lost at this time of year than any other. They are often hit by cars, never make it back home, or destroyed by a shelter because their owners don't show up in time or at the right shelter to claim them. (See the other side of this flyer for shelter listings.)

If you have lost or found a pet:

- Put up signs, pass out a lot of flyers, and place ads. Most found ads are free and some lost ads are too. Place ads in the O.C. Register, L.A. Times, Pennysaver and any community papers. If you find a pet without ID tags, take it to a veterinarian and have it scanned for a microchip.
- Go to shelters every day if possible. Check the shelter websites often.
- Have pictures and description details available.
